

I feel that large corporations, like Sinclair, do more harm to local communities when they demand their affiliates to air their own personal bias and give little or no opportunity for a rebuttal of the corporate opinion, either by those running the station or those with a differing point of view.

This recent order of Sinclair to air on its 62 stations an anti-Kerry program, and call it a "documentary" or "news," is outrageous and absurd. It's another reason for more oversight not less, limits on how many stations a corporation can own, and a perfect example of how one family, person, or corporation, can influence a community it apparently has no vested interest in except profits and influencing public opinion. In my opinion, this example does not serve the varied views of the public interest.
